

“Our neighborhood is poisoning our children,” . . .

Los Angeles, California
Photo by Mary McBride

. . . said thirty-eight year-old Josephina at a recent community meeting. Josephina lives with her husband and two young children in East Los Angeles. Her low-income community of color hosts a major freeway, several industrial facilities, and many contaminated sites. It's a toxic soup that residents call home.

The California Environmental Rights Alliance supports low-income communities of color confronting California's worst environmental problems. We work with community members and policy-makers to protect and empower those who need it most.

Everyone deserves the right to a clean environment.
You can help us work with people like Josephina who demand environmental justice.

We cannot do it without your support.

Please visit our donate page to give a gift to the California Environmental Rights Alliance.